

United States "is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel, carrying armament of any sort, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated," and that the United States was "seriously considering instructing officials accordingly."

It was announced as the text of these proposals was published after Germany had announced it had placed this policy in force. It was generally believed that the United States was in agreement with Germany.

The State Department did not take any steps to disabuse the minds of the press and public on this question until after the Lusitania settlement question came last week. Then it was announced that the United States had merely put the suggestions to the allies for humanitarian reasons, and would not change its policy to conform to the suggestion since the allies had rejected it.

One result of the anger in official quarters over misrepresentations given to the position taken by the United States was to bring to light the whole story of the negotiations between Secretary Lansing and Count von Bernstorff. It was revealed:

That the United States had advanced knowledge of the German and Austrian purpose to issue a new decree regarding merchantmen.

Knowledge of Decree.

That the United States in sending its suggestion to the entente allies for disarmament of merchant liners, did so as a result of knowledge of this proposed decree.

That Germany and Austria postponed the decree from February 1 to March 1. That at no time did the United States admit the legal right of Germany to issue such a decree, though admitting there was some justice in the German viewpoint.

That Germany, notwithstanding her failure to obtain the agreement of the United States to the issuance of the decree—this Government holding that no two or three governments could make international law for the world—went ahead and made her declaration, to be effective March 1.

That the United States believes Germany blundered.

The belief among high officials that Germany has blundered, grows out of the feeling that had the decree regarding merchantmen been withheld there was possibility that the United States suggestion to the allies might have borne fruit. There is little chance now, it is thought.

The direct connection between the armed merchantmen decree and the Lusitania case, was explained by a high State Department official in this manner:

"Germany by that decree renounced the question of future submarine warfare—the very first question that arose when negotiations over the Lusitania sinking began. To say there has been a change of policy on the part of the United States is unfair. The only change has been the withdrawal—by the issuance of the Mar. 1 decree—of the assurance given earlier by the United States regarding future conduct of submarine warfare."

SALES FIRST SHOW ILLUSTRATES HOW PUBLIC IS GUARDED

Modern Devices, From Wireless To Surf Line Gun, in National Exhibit Here.

With complete wireless telegraph outfits ticking off the measures they rather than from remote corners of the earth, model lighthouse beams flashing their warnings from one corner of the building to another, and coast sirens sounding warnings to far-spread vessels, the National Safety-First Association exposition will open tomorrow at the New National Museum.

Practically every bureau in the Government departments that is concerned with having, protecting, or conserving life, is co-operating with the District Police Department and the American Red Cross to make the exposition truly national in its scope.

It will be opened to the public tomorrow morning. There will be lectures in the afternoon by R. B. Dole on the work of the Geological Survey, and by Miss Helen Gordon on how the idea of safety first can be instilled into the mind of a child while it still is in kindergarten.

At 4 o'clock in the evening, Secretary of the Interior Lane will formally open the exposition. The day will be known as Interior Department day.

Show Police Signs.

"Go" and "Stop" signs, with which the Washington public has become familiar through their use by the city's traffic squad, will be demonstrated by the Police Department. A model of the department's patrol car, and how the department protects the river front and drags for the bodies of drowned persons, also will be shown.

Work of the Red Cross in war and peace, on the battlefield and in homes, when for clouds the sun shines, will be typified in the exhibits of that organization.

Actual wireless messages that pass through Washington will be received at the model station which is part of the exhibit, by the Bureau of Navigation in the Department of Commerce.

A wireless that ticks out its signals to vessels as far off as fitted ships when for clouds the sun shines from a lighthouse and dimly the sound of a siren or bell buoy, will be in operation.

It is a recent accomplishment of the Bureau of Standards. The bureau also has on display a brand new model of a "ship" which is suited for placing on ships to determine the direction and distance away of coast warnings and other wireless messages they receive.

Preparedness Spirit.

The "preparedness" spirit is evident at the very entrance to the exhibit, where the mule of a big gun frowns upon all who enter the room. Instead of swallows nesting in its mouth, there is protruding from it a stout rope that carries the line of a breeches buoy from the show to vessels in distress.

A veritable "chamber of horrors" is comprised in the exhibit of the Bureau of Inspection Service, composed of examples of faulty apparatus found by the inspectors. Included are links in steering chains worn to the breaking point, and pieces of defective boiler plate that would endanger the life of every passenger on a vessel.

Safety appliances required on railways by the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as models of cars showing development from the old wooden type to the modern all-steel equipment, are included in the exhibit by the commission.

For life preservers, equipment for caring for wounded sailors on vessels and for getting them ashore safely and comfortably are shown by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy Department.

Muzzles for Dogs.

The Public Health Service, Treasury Department, shows the proper way to muzzle dogs, and to protect dwellings against vermin and other dangers.

The Bureau of Mines, Interior Department, demonstrates suits worn by mine rescuers and apparatus for reviving victims of mine catastrophes.

Methods used to prepare and distribute storm and other weather warnings are shown by the Weather Bureau, of the Department of Agriculture.

Moving pictures, illustrated lectures, and actual demonstrations of apparatus and safety methods are used by practically all of the exhibits to educate the public as to the work it is doing. Each will have a special occasion during which attention will be centered on its work.

ALEXANDRIA LOSES HALF ITS LIQUOR TAX

General Assembly's Decision Requires Only Six Months' License Fee.

ALEXANDRIA, Feb. 20.—Alexandria liquor dealers are relieved by a decision reached by the finance committee of the general assembly to assess only six months State license on time for the six months that they will operate from May 1 to November 1.

On the latter date they will be compelled to close their doors, as the entire State will go dry at that time. There has been an effort on the part of the prohibition forces in the legislature to collect a full year's license for the six months in which the saloons will be permitted to operate. The State license is $500 per annum.

It is expected that the city council will follow the example set by the State in fixing the license for saloons.

In view of the loss of revenue from the forty-four liquor dealers in Alexandria, it is expected that the license will be raised on all other lines of business.

At a meeting of the congregation of the First Baptist Church this morning, a formal call was extended to the Rev. E. B. Jackson, of Warrenton, Va., to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Rev. Dr. W. P. Watson.

Safety appliances required on railways by the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as models of cars showing development from the old wooden type to the modern all-steel equipment, are included in the exhibit by the commission.

For life preservers, equipment for caring for wounded sailors on vessels and for getting them ashore safely and comfortably are shown by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy Department.
